

(DALF) for French, the Test of Proficiency in Korean (TOPIK) is designed as a proficiency test for the Korean language. As the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR) suggests common reference levels divided into three level groups, the Korean proficiency test divides the students into beginning, intermediate, and advanced levels according to their ability. They can be divided further into six sublevels and referred to as Lv.1 and Lv.2 for the beginning level, Lv.3 and Lv.4 for the intermediate level, and Lv.5 and Lv.6 for the advanced level.
